

Old Man Marathon Will Race Again

Clarence DeMa, seven times winner of the Boston Marathon and a veteran of the grind since 1910, looks at one of his many trophies at his home in Reading, Mass., after his final workout in preparation for the 51st running of the April 19 classic. This year 180 road racers besides DeMa are entered, and nine countries and territories are represented in the 26-mile-385-yard run: perhaps the most cosmopolitan field in the history of the event. Stylianos Kyriakides of Athens, Greece, is defending champion, and six other former winners are entered.
