Sportswriter Covering Marathon Hard Way

It has happened at last. A sportswriter is running in today's B. A. A. Marathon.

The footsy reporter is not one of your Boston authors, rest assured. He is Oswald Kisson, calypso-singing champion of the British West Indies who finished 18th in the 1946 classic.

Oswald is a young man of many parts. Recently he completed a course in commercial printing in Toronto and he is now busying himself with a course in journalism at Toronto University.

He is specializing in what he terms with becoming dignity as "sports journalism," and is sports editor of a small weekly known as the Afro-Beacon.

Sports Editor Kisson, by the way, derived extreme satisfaction out of his 18th place finish last year. His time of 2:56:18 on that occasion created a new West Indies record, and a similar performance this time would assure him of a place as the B. W. I. Marathon representative in the Olympics.
