

Greek Runner Wins Wreath And Nylons

Stanley Kyriakides, who ran away last Saturday with the 50th of Boston's historic marathons, was attempting this week to decide which of three things he received, he should prize the highest. There was the laurel wreath, that George Demeter placed on his head at the finish line, symbol of his victory. There was the cablegram of gratitude and congratulation from the head of the Greek Government. Last, but not least, there was the unexpected gift of a dozen pairs of nylon stockings presented to him by a Back Bay admirer, at the reception held in his honor, Monday evening at the Ritz Plaza Halls. Whatever way Stanley decides, his wife will probably vote 100 percent in favor of the nylons when he gives them to her on his return to Greece.

STANLEY KYRIAKIDES
